You took on the leadership role to organize and help the group keep track of what needs to be done and set our priorities. You were on top of your work and was a reliable team member. You also helped reviewed a lot of the code and gave me lots of advice when I'm stuck on something. You were open to offering criticisms, which was helpful for the group. One improvement could be to compromise more when design and implementation decisions are made. Sometimes, it felt like you were taking over. You could also be hung up on small details of the project at times and seemed to lose focus of the big picture.

Thanks for taking initiative on the testing and UI. At times, you could be hard to reach and were late to or unavailable at meetings. Try to plan out your schedule better and use Google calendars if you haven't already. There shouldn't be that many last minute conflicts in your schedule. Also try to be more active in deciding what you want to work on. I wasn't sure if you wanted to work on the parts you chose when we divided the work. Try to take more ownership of the project and let the team know when you disagree with something. Good job on the technical part though. Finished your assigned parts and kept track of that on a google doc.
